Halloween Week Math: 3rd Grade

A note for teachers and families

Halloween week is the loudest week of the fall, and this packet is built to run through it without a lesson in front of it. The routine is small on purpose: each day starts with a short warm up of easier problems, then one sheet, front and back, for five days. In class it is the ten quiet minutes after the candy corn count; at home it is fifteen minutes at the kitchen table. Every page reviews 3rd Grade skills from the first weeks of the year, like multiplication, division, addition & subtraction, so nothing here is new teaching and a third grader can start each page on their own. The answer keys at the back are numbered to match each page, so checking takes a minute. No screens, no logins, nothing to prep. If a day gets missed, just skip it or double up. The tracker is a rhythm, not a rule. The Challenge Day at the end is optional, for a child who wants one more.

If this packet earns its keep, a quick rating on TpT (My Purchases, then Leave a rating) helps the next teacher decide. TpT gives you credits toward future purchases for every rating. The last page shows how.
